Chef Tyson Cole cut his teeth at New York restaurant Bond Street before returning home to open this upscale Japanese spot. His shtick: pairing fresh fish, flown in daily from revered Tokyo fish market Tsukiji, with seasonal local ingredients: Think sea urchin with quail-egg yolk, and maguro sashimi with pumpkin-seed oil and shaved apples. The results are light and refreshing—meaning that you come here when you need respite from the Austin litany of enchiladas and smoked beef.
